CAN NORWAY LEARN FROM CHINA The books purpose is to reach parents and grandparents worldwide, to inspire them to be conscious about the quality of their loved-ones schooling. Parents and grandparents are more important than public authorities, teachers and researchers, to achieve successful school development. Quality education is the primary life insurance in a changing global world. From my experiences in Norway, East Asia, Finland and England, I present some ideas about how parents and grandparents can enhance school quality. China soon has the worlds largest economy. Can a substantial explanation be the respect for knowledge and the populations strong willingness to learn When China joined OECDs Pisa surveys (2009), Shanghais 15-year-olds were top in the world. The same was the case in Pisa 2013. Chinese students abroad, are those that complete the fastest. Is effort in school work Chinas strongest soft power Norway is a small, sparsely populated, super wealthy Scandinavian country. Historically, it had an excellent education system. That changed when the country switched to a US American curriculum model after World War II. Today the situation is worrying. Norway has rather low school quality objectively, and worse, relatively, when compared to amount of money used per student. Everybody has access to higher education, free of charge. Dropouts from higher education is increasing. In 2015, four out of ten university students dropped out. The nations position in international education rankings is mediocre or poor. Norway is the only country in Europe where a majority of the population does not see education as an important value. A common opinion among those who analyse the global economic competition is that individuals and nations level of knowledge is the power source number one. Importance of knowledge for individuals, companies...
